Miss Maiguerite Driscoll was the offertory spicies, accompanied by the choir, which numbers about thirty voices. At the tenthirty mass Millard's brilliant mass in G was sung by the senior choir with a fine sense of harmony and interpretation. At the offertory the ever-inspiring Hase Dies by Wiegand, was sung in finished manner reflecting much credit on the direction of the organist. The soloists the direction of the organist. The soloists of the day were Miss Sadie Driscoll, so-prane; Eleanor Donovan, soprane; Rose Maione, contraito; Nicholas Spellman.

or others. He must have indisputable cridence before accepting what ran counter to universal belief and experience.

Eight days after the resurrection, this evidence came in the closed room where the crucifixion and reminded him that "Thomas was in company with the other disciples. Jesus appeared in the midst of them, and, having been informed of Thomas' doubt, addressed him in the language of the test. After he had accepted the challenge and applied the test, his doubt immediately changed into enthinistatic belief as evidenced in his joy, ful exchangion: "My Lord and my God."

Then Jesus added these comforting and significant words: "Because thou hast seen Me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, yet have be-

POETRY ONE DAY.

Oh, come away, in leaving name,
From all your foul and furtive ways,
Where women, shackled to their sharps.
Drag out their undesired days.
With dull quiescent souls and mute,
Whose lives are bounded by the brute,
Whose souls were never swift in praise,
And who, in dim and dreadful ways.
Have given their beauty to the dust;
Where children crawl whose coming brings

brings
to thought of loyely sweet things,
for rebel question in the brain,
only a too familiar pain.

And you, who never dreamed, shall dream On ivied bridges, where below The cool dim waters move and gleam. And strange, fair thoughts shall come and go, And you who dance sometimes at night To a barrel-organ, ringed with light. Shall dance upon the windy hill To faint delirious pipes and shrill, A flight of birds on finshing wing. And crimson between a bourst.

biace,
Draw this forgotten secret wase.
And it shall be a sword of light,
O God! you will not care to fight.
